Acknowledgements:

The author wishes to acknowledge the assistance of a number of individuals who have contributed to this manuscript in a number of ways.

The assistance of Lynda Silver (Nova Scotia Museum Library) and Gail Judge (Nova Scotia Archives) was critical in the tracking down of valuable reference material, needed to ensure as broad a number of references was consulted as possible.

Review of the manuscript by Laura Bennett (Manager of the Collection Unit, Nova Scotia Museum), Dan Benoit (Chair of the COSEWIC Traditional Aboriginal Knowledge subcommittee), Gerald Gloade (Confederacy of Mainland Mi'kmaq) and Roger Lewis (Ethnologist, Nova Scotia Museum) provided important insight into both direction and content of this resource document.

Sharon Farrell and Roger Lewis provided welcome suggestions on appropriate usage of Mi'kmaq terminology in the manuscript.

The assistance and advice of Kim Franklin in the final formatting of the manuscript has helped in making the document a useful and functional tool in the exploration of this language. It is easy to provide information. It is more difficult to present it in a manner that may be of use by all.

Finally, I wish to acknowledge the role of the Elders of the Mi'kmaq First Nations for reminding us all of the importance of language in culture. It is their example that was the genesis of this document, a document that can be used to more-fully appreciate the role of language in the understanding of the natural world around us.

Hopefully this manuscript will be the next step in this long road.

Introduction

The Mi'kmaw language as it is used today derives almost exclusively from an oral or pictographic form. Written versions which appeared in the 17th and 19th centuries were attempts to codify both terms and their usage and pronunciation by European settlers, religious and academics. With the introduction of European cultural elements into "New World" culture, including domesticated animals, some Mi'kmaw words were created to define or differentiate these from traditional animal terms. During this codification, attempts were made by various authors to capture the oral words, inflections and pronunciations.

This document has been created as an aid to both the Mi'kmaw scholar as well as student to see the depth and variation of the Mi'kmaw language as it has applied to the animals found in Mi'kma'ki. With the adoption of the Francis-Smith orthography in 1974 a common form of usage has been developed to allow for the capture and standardization of many of the early terms.

This document summarizes published accounts of Mi'kmaw words used to identify or describe animals, be they mammals, birds, fish, amphibians, reptiles, insects or other invertebrates. They are presented in the forms they were published, with the inflections of the authors retained in the text. Although the review of the literature was extensive, some references may have been missed. If this is the case, it was not on purpose, and the author encourages any reader with additional insight to share such references for inclusion in future revisions.

For specific pronunciations of given words, the reader is referred to the respective articles and conventions as defined by these authors. In some cases, it becomes very evident that these terms are variations of a common word. In other cases, the similarities are not that obvious, and may reflect regional differences in names, different names, or, in some cases, different animals. If the authors did not indicate what the organisms were, specifically, then it may lay with current Mi'kmaw scholars, through further discussions with both Elders as well as communities to get a more-appropriate attribution.

It is hoped that this document will allow for a further investigation of this remarkably rich language and allow for its continued and expanded use in the field related to animals (zoology).

It is noted that there is one species included in this list for which there is no specific published Nova Scotia occurrence. That is the Polar Bear. It has been included because of the reference to white bear in several Mi'kmaw texts as well in passing in Rand (1875). Examination of vocabularies of adjacent First Nations (Maliceet, Naskapi and Montagnais) as well as Inuktatuk does not show a linguistic derivative. It bears strong similarity to the Cree word wapusk although there is no evidence of direct contact of Mi'kmaw and Cree cultures. It is possible that this species may have extended its range south to this geographic area during the last 13,000 years, but having become extirpated before the advent of Europeans is not documented, reference to it only persisting through the oral language route. It does not appear that it has derived from the contact the Mi'kmaw First Nations has had with northern peoples (Innu). A possibility exists that these may be reference to a white form of Black Bear, similar to the "Spirit" or white colour morph of the American Black Bear from islands off the British Columbia mainland (Hatler et al. 2008) (Ursus americanus kermodei) although there are no records of this type of colour variation in the province.

For ease of finding, the words and meanings are presented in the following order:

Mi'kmaw word (as given in the reference)

Plural ending to Mi'kmaw word (if it is also given in the reference) Where the plural is a simple addition to the base word, this letter or other ending is noted in parentheses.

English translation (as presented in the reference)

Editorial comment (in brackets) – if there is a correction or addition to this translation

Reference from which word and translation were retrieved. Printed references (books, reports, diaries etc.) are presented by senior author and year of publication. Web-based references are presented after the printed reference by letter (a, b, etc.) as listed in the references at the end of this document.

e.g.

kopit (aq)	beaver - Hewson, 1978b; Hewson and Francis, 1990; DeBlois, 1996; Mi'kmaw Kina'matnewey 2007; c,h
kuleboocheech	fawn (caribou?) - Rand, 1888 or
bilasugom (k)	newborn non-human - Metallic et al., 2005

Within each species group the words are put in alphabetical order within each life stage or type e.g.:

Bear
Male Bear
Female Bear
Bear Cub,
Young Bear
Old Bear

There are some Mi'kmaw terms for animals that are not attributed to a particular species or with further elaboration on initial name based on age,sex or habits. For example:
